Political Messiahs

This weekend West Australians again go to the polls. The promises have been made and only time will tell if they follow through. We naturally have expectations about our leaders, about what we expect them to achieve. Our political leaders hold considerable power but thankfully we live in a land where we have a say in who our leaders are and laws that hold them, like all of us, to account. More and more though we require more of our political leaders and parliaments, expecting at times or hearing them proclaim the ability to cure most of our society's ills. In the end though they will only leave us disappointed.

In contrast Jesus came as the King of God's kingdom, an unelected Messiah of whom many expected great and various things. For some he failed miserably, leaving the Romans in power unchecked while others saw only a threat. Yet others though saw the Son of God who came proclaiming the good news of forgiveness and renewal, who came calling men and women to follow and learn from him and who came saving and transforming lives, eventually changing an empire through faith.
