16th June 2019

The Firstborn over all Creation

Today's passage is, in part, made up of a profoundly deep description of Jesus Christ as the Son of God. The key term Paul uses is of Jesus as the firstborn, the firstborn over all creation and the firstborn from the dead. In the early days of the church some understood this term in Colossians 1 to indicate that Jesus was the very first created being through which God then made the rest of creation. This was the view of the heretic Arius whose views continue to be the view of the Jehovah's Witnesses. He meant well, seeking to protect the Christian faith from the charge of polytheism but the early church realise his view compromised the saving work of Christ as the God-man who stands in the gap for us.

The term can literally mean the first to be born but the term also came over time to speak figuratively as much about being the heir, the first in priority and pre-eminence so we understand Paul to mean the firstborn OVER all creation. Jesus is God the word through whom the Father brought the universe and humanity into being. This Trinity Sunday we remind ourselves of this great mystery that God is one God, three persons, co-existing and co-substantial through eternity. Yet Jesus' humanity also means he is the firstborn from the dead, the God who redeems and recreates and secures eternal life and salvation, who remakes us as the image bearers of God that Adam was and Christ is. Only Christ can be spoken of as the image of the invisible God and only he can restore that image in us, in knowing the living God as we ought.
