Old Church — New Life

20th November 2016

OUT OF THIS WORLD

There are those words we use in the church that almost no one else does, our jargon so to speak. Holiness, both the word and concept, is one such example. It's used as a description of God himself in his very being and character and in his dealings with the world. When scholars consider the language of the scriptures the term clearly refers in part to God's transcendence, to his separation from the creation he made.

For most ancient religions the gods were no more than reflections of deifications of forces seen and experienced in nature whereas the scriptures present God as the creator who made it from nothing as an act of pure grace and will.

Holiness is also a moral term, referring to his absolute perfection and purity, his moral integrity in word and deed. In being called into a relationship with him through Christ we are to be holy as he is holy. We strive for such purity, living our lives in the light of God's will and plan through the power and strength only given through the Holy Spirit.
