Transcending Understanding

The last chapter of Philippians contains verses that are familiar and often quoted, especially in the context of prayer. This includes the phrase often translated 'the peace that transcends all understanding'. What does that mean though to experience such peace as this?

Such peace in this letter is something profoundly relational. It is not just the relief we experience when we've been in a tense situation or relationship and it comes to an end. Rather Paul reminds us of one of the benefits we receive in receiving the righteousness of God in Christ through faith. Paul has reminded us in this letter of how the life of Christ from start to finish, past, present and future, from his incarnation as one of us to his eventual glorification up upon his return affects us.

The peace he writes of is a gift of the Holy Spirit that assures us he loves us, he cares for us, he upholds us and he protects us from spiritual harm and danger. Whatever our circumstances, no matter how difficult, he has us in his hand thanks to our Lord Jesus Christ and will NOT let us go.
